Her yearning for adventure eventually led her to the mountains of Scotland, where she spent her teenage years hiking, climbing, and camping. It was in these rugged landscapes that she developed a deep appreciation for the resilience and beauty of the natural world.

A Life-Changing Expedition

In her early twenties, Phoebe embarked on a life-changing expedition to the Amazon rainforest. As she ventured deep into the jungle, she was awestruck by the incredible diversity of life that flourished there. However, she also witnessed firsthand the devastating impact that human activities were having on this fragile ecosystem.

This experience sparked within her a profound sense of purpose. She realized that she had a responsibility to use her voice and actions to protect the natural world that she loved.

A Path to Environmental Advocacy

Phoebe's work with Greenpeace took her on extraordinary adventures around the globe. She sailed to the Antarctic to document the impact of climate change on penguin colonies. She trekked through the rainforests of Borneo to investigate the illegal wildlife trade. And she scaled the mountains of Nepal to advocate for the conservation of endangered species.

Along the way, Phoebe met inspiring individuals and local communities who were working tirelessly to protect their environment. These encounters reinforced her belief in the power of human action and the importance of collaboration.

The Birth of "Our Planet"

In 2019, Phoebe co-founded "Our Planet," a non-profit organization dedicated to empowering young people to take action on environmental issues. Through educational programs, youth-led campaigns, and community initiatives, "Our Planet" seeks to inspire and equip the next generation of environmental leaders.
